struggling to maintain her dignity and freedom. The paper looks at the rights of women in the constitution, the POSH act and some of the related case laws, and tries to shade a depiction of the current situation.

Keywords: Indian Constitution, Women and Laws, POSH Act

Introduction:

Constitution and gender is a stirring field, which attracts and influences scholars from all over the world, a lot has been studied and a lot of studies are going on. Today the women are given the same rights as men in the constitution, so that they can effectively participate in the affairs of the country and live as independently as men. The Constitution not only gives equality to women but also enables the state to adopt positive measures in favour of women. Recognizing the need for legislation, to improve the social situation and for adopting legislation, to ensure adequate protection against mental and physical abuse, the Constitution empowers women with certain rights but she is still vulnerable today as patriarchal culture tries to hinder her progress. At every stage of life, a woman has to try to survive on her own. Currently in India women are confronting the hardest time in their normal life. The principles of fundamental rights, fundamental duties and guidelines work together for the empowerment of women.

Women's rights are the results which are included in our Objectives:

In this paper researchers used the secondary data collection methods. Data collected through journals, books, and data available on the internet. Women's rights are on her side that make her life easier. It collected through journals, books, and data available on the internet. The objectives of this paper are:-

- To understand the women's rights
